

Mahtab Danai, MD

Dr. Mahtab Danai is interested in primary care with urban underserved communities, passionate about health equity and diversifying the healthcare workforce. She is a firm believer in one of her primary roles as a pediatrician being an advocate for her patients and families. She has prior experience in addressing food insecurity, homelessness, and substance use disorder through leading community outreach and research efforts. Dr. Danai is currently working on increasing screening and community outreach with victims of human trafficking and is involved in Seattle Children's Health Equity Rounds. Her favorite part of residency is working as a primary care provider at the Odessa Brown Children's Clinic. Dr. Danai is a first-generation Iranian American and California native who loves spending time outdoors and with loved ones, sketching, traveling, and swimming.

Hometown: Cupertino, California

Education: Pharmaceutical Chemistry, BS – University of California, Davis Class of 2015

M.D. – University of California, Davis School of Medicine Class of 2020; TEACH-MS track for students interested in primary care for urban underserved communities

Residency – University of Washington, Pediatrics Residency Program