"I was born and raised in Seattle, attending Garfield High School. I then attended Yale University. I worked for several years in the internet technology industry in both Seattle and Silicon Valley. I then decided on medical school to continue the family tradition. Medical school was at the University of Vermont, as was orthopedic residency. That was cold... and fun! A decade in the Northeast. Then we moved South for a year. Foot and Ankle fellowship was done in Dallas at Baylor University Medical Center. We then moved back home with newborns in tow. I joined Proliance Surgeons at that point in their Kirkland office called ProOrtho and have been with them ever since. I am now their managing partner. Interesting side note: I am a 4th generation doctor, the University of Washington's student health center is named after my great grandfather, Dr. David C. Hall, MD. My wife Mikka and I live in Kirkland with our twins, Grayson and McKinley, now almost 7. We do all kinds of fun stuff, from watersports to snow sports, from karate to baseball to basketball, we stay busy! With all that I try to stay socially conscious and engaged. I am a member of Physicians for Social Responsibility and recently participated in the KCMS Racism in Medicine webinar, hence my interest in the Society. Thanks for having me!"
